Jill Sheppard is a senior lecturer in politics at the Australian National University, and an investigator on the Australian Election Study. Her research focuses on why people participate in politics, what opinions they hold and why, and how both are shaped by political institutions and systems. Methodologically, her interests focus on sampling and fielding population-based surveys, questionnaire design, and respondent recruitment and retention. Jill is also an investigator the World Values Survey and Asian Barometer Survey, and a member of the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems planning committee.
